

The charming Southern Finland 2020

Being a country of abundant forests, until the last century the houses of Finland were built mainly of wood. Today the landscape is still dotted with entire wooden villages that have remained almost intact for decades or even centuries. A visit to one of these historical places is like taking a trip to Finland's past. In this beautiful region of the south we will visit 4 of the 7 sites with the title of UNESCO World Heritage Site that Finland has.

It should also be noted that Finland is a true nation of design. Finnish design icons such as Marimekko and Iittala, which we will visit on our trip, are still adored throughout the world, while a whole new generation of young and innovative designers are also taking over the scene.

All this is found in the lovely southern Finland!

According to Ahlström's values, traditions and care for the environment are appreciated. For the art and architecture enthusiasts there is Villa Mairea, designed by Alvar and Aino Aalto. Noormarkku Club is a restaurant awarded by the Rôtisseurs, specializing in local food with wild foods. We recommend taking a lunch break.

Tampere is the world capital of saunas because there are more public saunas here than anywhere else in the world. The historical jewel is the Rajaportti Sauna, which is the oldest public sauna in the country in operation - since 1906 - located in the historically working-class district of Pispala. Tampere rests on the slope of an ancient glacial ridge. What once was low-cost housing for factory workers and artists, is now a high-level residential area, where many famous artists and Finns have lived. Near the highest point on the hill is a monument to the Finnish poet Lauri Viita.

The Tower of the Bullets, symbol of the city, invites us to enjoy the views of the city.

This city is mainly industrial, partly due to Scot James Finlayson, a Scottish man who arrived in Tampere around 1820 and founded a textile workshop next to the river, also highlighted by the Romanesque architectural style Cathedral. Located about 50 kilometers east of Helsinki, Porvoo is not exactly a coastal city, it is connected to the Gulf of Finland through the Porvoo River. The river flows through the city, passing through the most famous places in Porvoo: its houses on the red coast. Originally, the houses on the coast were painted red in honor of the arrival of Gustav III, the king of Sweden.

Historically, Porvoo has been an important center of commerce and houses on the coast were used to store goods and products, such as exotic delicacies from distant lands.

Designed following the movement of garden cities from England with private plots for all tenants, these areas were built in the 1900s to improve the lives of city workers working in the industry.
